OF LOVE

By Charmaine Marinkovich from Marinkovich Photography

Wow, you're getting married, congratulations!

A wedding is a celebration of your love for one another, the joining of families and the beginning of a new chapter in your life. It will be a day of expression and declaration.

First things first, planning for your big day is going to take a serious amount of time. Once you have set a date, decide if you plan to organise your wedding or if you feel help will be needed. Many couples have chosen to plan their wedding day themselves with the help of family and friends, however the growing trend of having a wedding planner seems much more desirable.

Planning your wedding should be fun and enjoyable, although unless you are super organised, then bridezilla could be just around the corner. Having a wedding planner can take away any unnecessary stress and give you time to enjoy each step towards your unique day.

When planning your wedding keep in mind who you are, what makes you happy and in keeping with that, you will plan a wedding day that is unique to you as a couple. Happy planning.

Stress-free wedding day

This month I caught up with wedding coordinator Sarah Chambers.

What can you help with?

A number of different things, depending on their budget and how much help they require. I can help with setting a theme for their wedding then deciding where, when and how, right down to been there on the day.
